

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

In an access point apparatus for a wireless LAN system equipped with a terminal location detecting function, memory capacity required for the access point apparatus is reduced. A received signal memory control module (120) controls access such that a memory space of a received signal memory (102) can be reused by performing sequentially overwrite operation while stopping capturing of the received signal in response to a packet detection signal outputted from a packet detecting module (121).